

Japanese Foreign Policy: From Yoshida to Abe

Public Lecture Series by Distinguished Guest Speakers from Japan

Under the Abe administration, Japan has seen both a recovery in its economy, and a more proactive stance in its foreign policy. Japan is back, but where is it going? In this lecture, Professor Kiichi Fujiwara will examine the two arenas of Japanese foreign policy, national security and overseas markets, and explain its pendulum-like nature as it oscillates between the prioritization of the former or the latter. He will then discuss the rise and demise of economic diplomacy, along with recent radical swings in US-Japan relations, from the Hatoyama administration to the Abe administration. Professor Fujiwara will look to address some simple and yet mind-boggling questions related to the course of Japan's foreign policy.
