

MECHANISM AND HISTORIES OF 'HISTORICAL DISPUTES' BETWEEN JAPAN AND SOUTH KOREA

Public Lecture Series by Distinguished Guest Speakers from Japan

How have relations between Japan and South Korea changed over the last half century? Professor Kimura explores this question by looking at the changing domestic and geopolitical circumstances that might shape the conditions of this relationship today. Arguing that the two countries now have less power asymmetry, there is an urgent need to renegotiate the terms of the Treaty on Basic Relations Between Japan and the Republic of Korea, a treaty that is now fifty years old. These changes ought to take into account South Korea's reduced economic dependence on Japan, new strategic alliances and the decline of old historical hurts from memory. A benign neglect in updating this treaty risks an absence of a functioning bilateral mechanism in the case of an emergency.

Venue: NUSS Guild House, Left Chamber
9 Kent Ridge Drive
Singapore 119241
For access map, please click
<http://tinyurl.com/ovckvrd>

When: Tuesday, 8 September 2015
14:00-15:30
 (Attendance registration starts at 13:30. Light snacks and drinks will be provided after the event.)

Free admission. Register now at <https://inetapps.nus.edu.sg/jps01/reg08.aspx>

Or access this QR code:
 (Limited seating available.
 Registration on first-come first-served basis.)

For any other enquiries please email:
asiancentury@nus.edu.sg

SPEAKER: Kan Kimura

Professor, Graduate School of International Cooperation Studies,
 Kobe University, Japan

Dr. Kan Kimura is Professor of Graduate School of International Cooperation Studies, at Kobe University, Japan. He was born in Osaka, Japan in 1966, and got his doctoral degree from Kyoto University in 2001. He also taught at Ehime University, Japan and studied at many academic institutes, including Seoul National University, Harvard University, Australian National University and the University of Washington as a visiting scholar. His major is Comparative politics and Korean studies. He has published many books and papers about Korean politics in Japanese, English or Korean, including: Nikkan Rekishinshiki Mondai towa Nanika in 2014, and 'Discovery of Disputes', "Journal of Korean Studies" Vol.17, No.1, in 2012.

Find out more at: www.asiancenturysg.com